The New School is a unique urban university founded in 1919 by progressive scholars such as Charles Beard, John Dewey and Thorstein Vleblen. They wanted to break away from traditional universities and create a center for free discussion, minimal hierarchy and an open curriculum. This is a groundbreaking Masters with several compelling features including:

- Professional training in four specialized areas (teaching, publishing and writing, curriculum development and program development and management)
- The opportunity to gain real work experience in the form of a practicum, an internship or a professional project
- Flexible study options (entirely online or online with a face-to-face summer intensive)
- International faculty including Scott Thornbury, Jeremy Harmer, Erik Gundersen, Michael Carrier and Richard Rossner.

The stand will include program catalogues, a prize draw, representatives from the university to answer questions, a computer to show the program online, and free t-shirts.
